Crisis is over' at nuclear plant

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Gov. Dick Thornburgh said Monday it was safe for preschool children and pregnant women to return to homes within five miles of the Three Mile Island nuclear plant. A top federal official said the "crisis is over" at the crippled facility.

Harold Denton, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's chief of operations, added, however, that it would be several more days before the plant would be brought to cold shutdown.

Thornburgh made the announcement that the evacuation of the two groups considered most endangered by radiation could end after 11 days and said the news "means that it is now considered safe."

At the height of the crisis, spawned by a nuclear accident that officials had difficulty bringing under control, Thornburgh had advised that pregnant women and young children leave an area within five miles of the plant.

On Monday, he also said schools in the five-mile radius could reopen and state offices could return to business as usual, that the Civil Defense had been ordered to descend from full alert to on-call status and that there was no threat to public health from milk or drinking water in the area.

However, he added: "This does not mean that we will relax our vigil. We will continue to monitor the entire situation on a 24-hour basis."

Authorities were still finding traces of radioactive material, but they had dropped off to near the normal background levels.

Also on Monday, the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission staff asked the commission to reconsider a $49 million rate increase granted last month to Metropolitan Edison Co., primary operator of the plant.

Staff attorneys said the increase was based on operating costs at the plant, which is now "unlikely to be in commercial operation for the foreseeable future."

Denton said more attempts might be made to reduce gas pockets from the primary cooling system of the crippled nuclear reactor before an attempt was made to bring the reactor to cold shutdown.

"The next step would be to lower the temperature of the primary system. That step won't be taken for several more days," he said.

NRC officials said it would take at least five days to bring the reactor to cold shutdown once the delicate process begins.

"We're in no rush," said Denton.

Anti-inflation crusade begins

SHINGTON (AP) — A wide citizens' crusade against prices got under way Monday resident Carter's chief inflation saying if voluntary anti- efforts fail, it could lead to tory controls or a recession.

White House Press Secretary owell said Carter would not con- mposing mandatory controls.

d E. Kahn told some 250 labor the alternatives to Carter's ary wage and price guidelines nthinkably worse."

n told the group: "There are a of commonly proposed alter- that the president and I both not acceptable."

But, he added, "An honest person has to admit that if this (voluntary) program doesn't work, we may get one or another of those alternatives, whether we like it or not.

"We may get the one that some of you say you want —mandatory controls. With the mood of the country the way it is today, however, and the way it is likely to be if this inflation continues unabated, we may get the one that neither you nor I wants.

"I refer, of course, to the option of clamping down on the economy so severely that we bring on a serious recession and throw millions of people out of work — your people — in a repeat of 1974-75. The president is determined not to use recession as a tool to cure inflation...

"The president is equally determined not to resort to the second method of restraining those excessive demands — mandatory wage and price controls."

Despite Kahn's comments, Powell said "absolutely not" when asked if Carter was thinking of asking Congress for authority to impose mandatory controls.

Powell said Kahn "in no way meant to imply that this president would under any circumstances impose wage and price controls."

problem is Canyon Road. The lks are few and far between and gutters nonexistent. Children walking home from school are sometimes forced to walk in the street, causing a hazard to motorists and themselves.

What can the city do to express their concerns to the neighborhoods involved and what can the neighborhoods do to get the city to respond to their needs?

In Provo, the solution is the neighborhood program. A meeting is held in Provo Commissioner J. Earl Wignall's office to discuss the problems on Provo Canyon Road. With him is Jack Zirbes, city engineer; Leland Gamette, neighborhood coordinator; and two neighborhood chairmen, Keith Hooker of Little Rock Canyon and Karl Pope, Edgemont.

"We want to make the street safer for pedestrians, with strip paving and curb, gutter and sidewalk improvement," Wignall said. "We are here to discuss alternatives on how to accomplish it. We are thinking about having a special improvement district."

A special improvement district allows for the residents to pay for the improvements over a ten year period, but the city advertises the work, stakes it and lets out the bids, according to Zirbes.

Wignall said the city is presenting the idea of a special improvement district to the two neighborhood chairmen, so they can present it to their neighborhoods and get suggestions and feedback from them.

He said the purpose of the neighborhood program is to provide a two-way communication channel between the city and the citizens.

Perry and Jon Bratt discuss the successes and failures of their past year as president and vice president. The brothers felt they fulfilled their campaign promises and they were pleased with the turnout in the student elections. Their biggest conflicts were with the ASBYU courts, they said.

Bratts review term

Editor's note: As the semester comes to an end and new ASBYU officers prepare to take their place, Universe reporter D. Patrick Denny interviewed Perry and Jon Bratt about their experiences of the past year as ASBYU president and vice president. The following is a verbatim report.

By D. PATRICK DENNY
Universe Staff Writer

Universe: The first question has to be, "How did it go this year?"

Perry: We fulfilled every platform promise from our campaign except for the married student seminars. We only had one because the second time around we couldn't get the right speakers in time. We hope we've been open and sensitive to student needs.

Jon: Our campaign theme was "You Make BYU" and so all year we centered everything we did on that theme. We started off at orientation by instilling into the students the idea that they make BYU what it is. Just looking at the theme and how we've tried to incorporate it into our programs, we feel like we've been fairly successful in helping many students come to realize that they are the ones who make BYU what it is.

Universe: The "You Make BYU" slogan got its knocks, though.

Perry: Well, the orientation committee requested permission to use it, and so did several other campus publications. The Daily Universe used it, too . . .

Universe: I was alluding to that —

Jon: But you promoted it, really. Steve's (Benson) and Pat's (Bagley) cartoons made fun of it, but in a good way.

Universe: How would you rate ASBYU's working relationship with the administration this year?

Perry: They've been very pleasant to work with. The feeling we've received from most of those in the administration is that they want to help us and work with us.

Jon: They have been really good to us. Anything they have recognized as being good for the students they have let us go through with. There's much respect and support for our programs, from Dallin Oaks on down the line.

Universe: Is that an improvement over past administrations?

Perry: The big improvement there, is in structure. My adviser used to be the assistant director of the Wilkinson Center. He was tied to student government and the administration but it wasn't nearly as effective as now, with Maren Mouritsen as our adviser. Consequently we now find that things get done fast. Maybe in the past a proposal from us would take a semester to get an answer, now in two or three days she has the word for us.

Universe: There is concern about the "natives and visitors" comments we've heard from the administration. Is there a new feeling, a "pro-student" feeling developing in the administration because of this change?

Perry: We have more freedom. More than anything, when we decide to do something, we have backing.

Universe: How can ASBYU be a learning experience, not only for you, but for everyone?

Homosexuality: Cause for concern?

Editor's note: This is the first in a three-part series on homosexuals at BYU. Universe Graduate Assistant Barbara Murphy, Assistant News Editor Alice Tate, News Editor David Long and reporter Joseph Walker interviewed a cross section of six BYU homosexuals and several university and church officials, as well as psychologists and other experts on the subject. Some names of homosexuals in the series are ficticious to protect identities.

Paul is a junior at BYU. He is six foot three, with curly brown hair, brown eyes and a muscular build. He likes sports, particularly basketball.

On the surface, Paul looks like the average BYU student. He's an "A" student, a recent convert to the LDS Church and active in his student ward.

But beneath the Mormon veneer, Paul's lifestyle is one not accepted by the LDS Church or society. Students like Paul are causing concern among officials at BYU.

Paul is a homosexual.

There are no accurate means of determining how many homosexuals there are at BYU. No organization of "gay" students exists on campus, and since BYU officials do not attempt to keep a homosexual census, most figures quoted by anyone are merely estimates.

Robert Kelshaw, chief of BYU Security/Police, declines to release figures on the number of homosexuality arrests on campus, referring reporters' inquiries to the dean of Student Life.

"There is always a problem when you get 25,000 students together," said J. Elliot Cameron, dean of Student Life. "However, I do not think the problem of homosexuality is as extensive at BYU as in society in general."

There is no real indication whether the incidence of homosexuality is increasing or declining at the university.

According to local psychologists who are working on homosexuality research, anywhere from 1 to 4 percent of the BYU male population have homosexual tendencies. Dr. Ford McBride, a psychologist at Timpanogos Community Mental Health Center, and Dr. Maxine Murdock, licensed psychologist at the BYU Counseling Center who works with homosexual students, estimate the figure at 4 percent. McBride said his estimate is based on extrapolations of the old Kinsey report.

"Too many people still think homosexuality doesn't exist on campus, when nothing could be further from the truth."

According to Cameron, "The number of cases we have handled over the last five years has remained constant each year."

Provo Police figures show during the last four years they have arrested a total of 32 individuals, both students and non-students, for "lewdness in a public place."

Cpl. R.M. Johnson of the city police vice squad said during the same period he talked to "in excess of 50 individuals" he suspected, including students, but made no arrests.

Utah County Sheriff's detective Sgt. David Bateman said persons affiliated with BYU are included in the 21 arrests for homosexual conduct his office has made since 1976. "If it is a student, we do not notify BYU," Bateman said, "but if it is a faculty member, we notify BYU Security."

However, other BYU psychologists who have made studies of the problem claim the number is lower. Dr. Victor Brown Jr., director of the Values Institute, a BYU research group which among other things delves into problems of the sexes, agrees with Cameron that the BYU homosexual population is lower than society in general.

"I think Kinsey's estimate for the population as a whole is probably fairly accurate," Brown said, "but I think the figure here at BYU is substantially lower — more in the neighborhood of 1 to 2 percent."

Dr. Allen E. Bergin, BYU psychology professor who is conducting research on the problem with the BYU Values Institute, said, "There is really no accurate data. No one knows for sure."

Robert M. Waldrop, the pastor of a "gay" church in Salt Lake City, says there is a "pretty large gay community in Provo." He said he has talked to 50 to 60 different BYU students in the past year. "We have only one current BYU student who has actually become a member of the church," he said. "There are about five or six students who attend on a regular basis."

Paul said even though homosexuals do exist at BYU, it would be impossible to form any kind of student organization. But there is a national group — Gay Mormons United — which Paul says consists of "militant gay Mormons." Another group, known as "Affirmation," also holds weekly meetings in Salt Lake City. Waldrop says the majority of those who attend are BYU students. But Tom, a student who attends the meetings, said most gay students do not belong to the organization.

Because there is "no place in Provo," most gays say they go to Salt Lake City to the "gay bars" or discos for entertainment.

Since BYU is owned by the LDS church, and the church has taken a strong stand against homosexuality, why do gay students come to BYU and why do they stay?

Paul, 21, said he visited the university and liked what he saw. "I thought it would be good to come here to try and change," he said. Paul didn't change. "I came here not expecting to find others. I was like everyone else; I didn't think it existed at BYU.

"I believe people here are very ignorant of the subject," Paul said. "I don't feel like I fit into any stereotype. No one has ever suspected me, or accused me of being effeminate."

In fact, Paul said most of his friends are "straight." "I don't have very many gay friends and I seldom see them on campus. I'm kind of choosy about my friends. I don't like all gays just because they are gay."

Last January, Paul said he didn't know of any other gays at BYU. He said he now knows of 20 gay students, but adds that there are many "closet cases."

BYU officials do not deny homosexuality exists on campus. In fact, one BYU Security officer said, "We are very much aware of the homosexual problem on campus and are doing all we can to effectively handle the situation. It's a very sensitive issue — both for the university and for the church." But he adds, "It is time that we deal with the problem out in the open. Too many people still think homosexuality doesn't exist on campus, when nothing could be further from the truth."

"Homosexuals have basic codes of behavior, words and actions they use to identify each other," according to Cpl. Johnson, Provo city police. Un-

Pope says celibacy a 'gift'

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Calling celibacy a "gift," Pope John Paul II on Monday upheld mandatory celibacy for Roman Catholic priests and took a tough stance against those seeking dispensation from their vows.

Pope JOHN PAUL II

The pope issued a strong reaffirmation of the 1,500-year-old ban on priestly marriage in a 35-page pastoral letter to all priests of the church and in a separate eight-page letter to the church's bishops.

"Since the priesthood is given to us so that we can unceasingly serve others after the example of Christ the Lord, the priesthood cannot be renounced because of the difficulties that we meet and the sacrifices asked of us," the pope wrote.

African gangs kill thousands

PARIS (AP) — Marauding tribal gangs in southern Chad, aided in some cases by mutinous troops and police, have killed at least 10,000 persons in the last month. Victims were mostly Moslem shopkeepers and their families according to reports reaching here Monday from missionaries in the capital of N'Djamena.

Detailed reports from Jesuit mission stations said 4,000 to 5,000 persons were murdered in Moyen-Chari province and 5,000 to 6,000 in West-Logone province in the first two weeks of March.

Lance case prejudiced by media?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department asked a federal judge Monday to dismiss a motion charging that a federal investigation into the bank dealings of former Budget Director Bert Lance has been prejudiced by news leaks.

The department filed a 17 page legal document in federal court in Atlanta, saying Lance failed to support the allegations in his motion to the court.

Train mishap forces evacuations

CRESTVIEW, Fla. (AP) — Thousands of Florida Panhandle residents, forced from their homes Sunday by toxic yellowish-black fumes billowing from the area's latest chemical-train derailment, awaited word Monday on when they might be able to return.

About 4,500 people were driven out of an 80-square-mile area surrounding the pileup and spent the night in temporary shelters at schools and National Guard armories. Some were allowed to return home Monday, and Tom Nichols, director of the Okaloosa County Civil Defense team, said officials are considering letting everyone return except those living within four miles of the wreck.

LAYTON, Utah (AP) — The Layton City Council, after debating whether pinball is addictive, has lifted an ordinance that restricted the game to those under 18.

Bratts review year in office

Perry: One thing we've started is the leadership committee. We had a leadership seminar in January plus the KASH lectures — great speakers, but we were disappointed with the attendance. One of the best ways to get involved in leadership is to join one of the student committees in ASBYU. There are 18 in my office alone, and Jon has some 20 or 21. For example, the people in the court system can get great experience and find if they really want to get into law and graduate school.

Universe: What are some of the problems you encountered this year?

Perry: Some of our biggest conflicts have come with the ASBYU courts, the removal of Kirk Cullimore being an example. But we've had a good relationship with the courts overall. Granted, we've had our differences, but that's why there's a court — to check us. Our two biggest checks are the Daily Universe and the courts. Public relations is one of our big sore spots. Some new people came into our PR committee in February . . . I am cautious because I don't want to slight the new people. Considering when they came in, they've done a great job. We had to release the previous committee — it's a long story.

Universe: Have you seen any lessening of the apathy problem here at BYU?

Jon: The Executive Council had a goal of getting 50 percent of the students out to vote this year. We had 8,000 students, or 32 percent vote, phenomenal, especially when you look at the other schools —

Perry: I think the U of U had a voter turnout of 6 or 8 percent.

Jon: So that's indicative of the fact that there are many who feel that ASBYU is effective. We really are happy about that. We don't take the credit for it, but we're glad it's happening.

Universe: What have been your biggest successes this year?

Perry: The new presidential citation, Sak Yak, Record Racket and the open houses all come to mind immediately as having been very successful. We hope Dave (Litster) and Kim (Cox) will continue them next year.

Universe: How effective of a contact have you had with the studentbody?

Perry: We just don't get enough student input. We'll get seven letters from our suggestion boxes on a good week. Half of those are a joke and the others are typical, like about the ticket policy or something similar. The majority of new ideas that we bring to the administration come from letters to the editor. We have several "on file" right now. But we could use much, much more input from the suggestion boxes.

Jon: There are a lot of ideas out there. Students share them with their friends or complain, but it takes quite a while for the ideas to get out of the masses and into the areas that need improvement.

County to allocate $1 million

By RICHARD BURGSTROM
Universe Staff Writer

The last chance for public comment on the appropriation of more than $1 million in federal revenue sharing funds will take place Wednesday in the Utah County Commission chambers.

Unless change is advocated, the county commission will adopt a proposed county revenue sharing budget at the end of the hearing. Citizens are urged to offer comment at the 10 a.m. meeting.

The proposed budget shows $900,000 of the money tentatively allocated to the county general fund, which provides funding for equipment and operating expenses. Included in the general fund revenue sharing expenditures is $150,000 for data processing equipment, $100,000 for the Alcohol Recovery Program, $100,000 for the county fair and $149,000 for mental health programs such as the Timpanogos Community Mental Health Center. Senior citizens will benefit from this year's budget, with money going to the Foster Grandparents Program, the Agency on Aging, and the Retired Senior's Volunteer Program.

The capital improvement portion of the county budget will receive $300,000. The major item in this section of the budget is $145,000 for this year's loan payment on the county's controversial Municipal Funding deal. The county park system is a major recipient of the remainder of the budget which includes $26,000 to improve Canyon Glen.

The amount of revenue sharing money received yearly from the federal government depends on the number of people in the county, said James A. Sutherland, chief deputy to the county auditor. "The Feds have a formula based on population," he said. "It's not something we request."

• Homosexuality: A concern?

dercover policemen know and use the signals to apprehend offenders. "People frequenting restrooms are very much afraid of being apprehended because of the social impact upon them. Therefore they are very careful."

A few years ago there were a "great number of arrests in a short period of time" on campus. Security officers worked primarily in the Wilkinson Center restroom, one officer said. "The number of arrests was substantial because they were there and we were there." About half of the arrests were non-students.

Arrests made by Provo police are not reported to the university, Johnson said. "A separation of church and state is always maintained." When BYU students are arrested, the administration is never notified, he said.

Cameron said some cases, which come to the attention of his office, are referred by students who may have been approached by a homosexual. "Every college campus is considered by overt homosexuals to be an excellent source for contacts," he said. "Some individuals, who are not students, come to campus to solicit." People who are offended by these offers contact the administration, Cameron said.

Others are discovered through police records. Cameron said if charges against students appear in the paper, they become public knowledge and the students "would probably be identified and we would take action."

As dean of Student Life, Cameron gets a report on every case handled by BYU Security/Police, including any arrests or complaints about homosexuals.

"We're not trying to harrass anybody," one Security officer explained. "As long as a homosexual keeps his preferences to himself, no one is going to bother him. We just want to keep them from bothering people in public places.

"I want to feel like I can let my kids go into a public restroom alone, and know that they are going to come out the same way they went in — innocent," he said. "Right now, in some places in this city, I don't have that security."

One BYU senior, who was accosted in a Wilkinson Center restroom said, "I've been at the Y for three years, and I didn't even know we had homosexuals here. Now I know."

While some homosexual recruiting exists at BYU, most gays say they are not out to change other people's opinions. "I'm offended when anyone accuses me of recruiting," Paul says. "I don't want to make anyone feel like they have to change their beliefs. I'm not one who is gung-ho gay; my interests and life are more diverse than that. I'm not militant gay rights. I want people to understand and respect me, even though I have a different philosophy."

For those who are uncomfortable with their feelings and approach their LDS bishops, the information is confidential. According to Dean Cameron, the bishop may "refer the individual to the university for counseling if they have serious problems." However, "a bishop's communication with his member is privileged and he is not required to give us (the university administration) any information." In return, the university does not have any "set routine that says we contact the bishop" when they find out about cases concerning homosexuals, Cameron said.

Dr. Murdock said she often refers students who come to her to their bishops, but, she stresses, "I usually tell the bishop that what the person tells me is confidential."

The concern of those affiliated with the university is to "help the individual to straighten out his or her life," Cameron said.

In trying to accomplish this goal, the procedure when working with homosexual students usually follows one of four steps: referral to a counselor for treatment; referral to the person's bishop where applicable; suspension from school or legal action.

"No individual receives preferential treatment because of his or her position in the university, whether student or faculty," Cameron said.

Cameron said the Code of Honor is very specific about the fact that the law of chastity prohibits any sexual relationships outside the bonds of marriage, including both hetero- and homosexual relationships.

"A student can have homosexual tendencies not expressed in overt behavior and still live the Code of Honor," Cameron said. "There has to be a violation of the Code of Honor by overt behavior before action can be taken against alleged homosexuals."

Israel protests Egypt's intentions

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israel protested to the United States and Egypt Monday over a reported declaration in Cairo by Premier Mustafa Khalil that Egypt would stand by Syria if it attempted to liberate the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights.

Later Monday, an Egyptian government spokesman said Egypt would join Syria in military action against Israel only if the Jewish state refused to give up the disputed Golan Heights through negotiations.

The protest appeared to be the first dispute over the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty since it was signed two weeks ago.

Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan sent a letter to Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, and Prime Minister Menachem Begin sent a copy to President Anwar Sadat of Egypt along with a personal note, a foreign ministry spokesman said.

neighborhood program has been part of Provo ong time, according to Gamette. "It was really zed in the mid 60's; the neighborhoods were entered around the schools," he said. "They amed after the school, while basically being phic in nature."

rong association still remains between the s and the neighborhoods since the school dis- llows the neighborhoods to use the school gs for meetings. The districts recently opened ildings for the neighborhood chairmen elec-neighborhood progam became official when it ritten into the master plan in 1968. It was d to function on a loose basis until 1973 when it rganized. "It was upgraded and made a work- rt of the city," Gamette said.

program was formalized by an ordinance 29, 1978. Since that time it has undergone changes and increased from 25 to 29 neighborhoods.

The next step in the program is the area councils. There are five area councils in the city, each composed of a chairman and a representative who serve on the neighborhood advisory board.

The advisory board meets with the city commission once a month to discuss the concerns of their areas. They also provide a sounding board for the commission.

"The advisory board is new and has only had four meetings," Gamette said. "The purpose is to provide a close link between the city commission and the neighborhoods.

"It is important for the commission to sit down with them and find out the problems and needs of the neighborhoods," he said.

"It makes the public official better if they can feel the pulse of the people," Wignall said. "The neighborhood program is a good way to feel this pulse."

SDSU wins wet one; Cougars edged 9-10

BYU's luck seemed to wash away in Monday's game against San Diego State, for although the Cougars staged a gallant battle, they were downed by the Aztecs 9-10 when the game was called in the top of the ninth due to rain.

The Cougars and the Aztecs exchanged the lead twice throughout the the game before SDSU finally came out on top. Power hitting seemed to be the key to the game, as the home run resulted in some of the most important scoring.

The first of those HRs came in the first inning when SDSU's Paul Wirkes jumped on a Greg Petersen pitch to send it sailing over the left field fence as the first hit of the game.

The second of those HRs came in the second inning, under peculiar circumstances. With the bases loaded, lead-off Aztec Chris Jones powered a ball which cleared the right field fence, then took a bounce. Or did the ball take a bounce, then clear the right field fence?

Spectators in the stands claimed it bounced over, right fielder Mark Hildebrand claimed he didn't see it, and BYU Assistant Coach Ken Voeller claimed it bounced under the fence. At any rate, the umps called it a full-fledged homerun, and four Aztec runs were scored on it to give them a 5-0 lead.

In the meantime, the Cougars registered only one hit. But BYU served notice that they were still in the game during the third and fourth innings, scoring twice in each.

Cougar offense reached its climax in the fifth, which Hildebrand led off with a standup double. The Cougars totaled four runs in that inning, three of them brought in by a Ken Clayton homer. Considering the single run the Aztecs scored in the fourth, the Cougars now had an 8-6 lead.

The Cougars scored for the last time in the sixth, but Aztec bats kept on coming. They scored twice in the seventh, and twice more in the eighth, in the last of the game's strategic homeruns, hit by Mark Snyder, giving the Aztecs their single point lead.

Before the Cougars had a chance to come back, the rains that had been plaguing the day's competition finally brought it to a halt, and the game was called in Aztec favor. Today the Cougars will have a chance to revenge their loss, as they take on SDSU again at 2 p.m.

CLAMPETT

After awhile it begins to sound like a broken record: Clampett to tangle with Japanese Stars, Cougar golf star vying for U.S. Amateur title, Clampett holds keys to success, Clampett ties leaders in Pro-Am tourney...

For the past year BYU's Bobby Clampett has virtually stolen the show in amateur golf, having already played in the U.S Open, the Porter Cup, the Eisenhower Cup and the U.S. Amateur Golf Championship. It's in the wind that Clampett may become the next Jack Nicklaus.

Now the California native has the opportunity to add another feather to his cap as he competes this week in the Masters, golf's most prestigious tournament, in Augusta, Ga.

This week, as Clampett takes the long drive down Magnolia Lane, he will be making history. Oh, not that he will be the first BYU golfer ever to make the trip, that's been done before by many-a Cougar golfer, but unique to Clampett is that, at 18, he will be the youngest player ever to compete in the tournament.

The string of Cougars to play in the tournament started with 1973 U.S. Open titlist Johnny Miller, who made the trip down Magnolia Lane in 1967. Since then John Fought, Stan Souza and Mike Brannan have made the trip.

But being in the spotlight isn't something new to Clampett. Last summer in the U.S. Open, at Cherry Hills in Denver, Colo., Clampett caught some of the limelight as he finished low amateur for the tournament.

Clampett had a spectacular series of successes last summer, virtually unbroken. Along with the U.S. Open, the tall, lean sophomore also captured the California State Amateur, the Western Amateur, the Western Junior and the Porter Cup at Niagara Falls. He is the first player to win both the Western Amateur and the Western Junior in the same year.

Impressive? Very much, but it doesn't stop there. As September rolled around, Clampett was at it again, this time in the U.S Amateur tournament in New Jersey. In this tourney, Clampett reached the semifinals of amateur golf's most prestigious title.

After returning to BYU in the fall, Clampett continued to offer his services to the team but made exceptions when special tournaments arose. Two significant tournaments were the Eisenhower Cup, in which he took medalist, and the NCAA-Japan golf tournament.

Now, Clampett's next stop is Augusta, and the All-American is entering the Masters fresh off a medalist win in the Fresno Classic Saturday.

Oh, and if Bobby Clampett sounds like a broken record, get used to it. This superstar will be around for a long time.

Volleyball team takes third place

The Cougars won their opening match then split the remaining three to take third place in the 2-A Division of the fifth annual Oakland Invitational Volleyball Tournament, Saturday in Oakland, Calif.

The Cougars got off to a good start in the tourney, topping the Santa Barbara Volleyball Club in straight games, 15-9, 15-12. BYU then split with the Hot Dogers, 12-15, 15-8; the Hulks, 15-11, 13-15 and finally with the Village Hosts, 9-15, 16-14.

The Cougars will next see action when they host the United States Volleyball Association Western Regional Tournament April 28 and 29. According to Coach Mike English, the Regional will be a prerequisite for entry in the USVBA Nationals to be held in Dayton, Ohio, in June.

Y opera 'Regina' enjoyable

By BETH WOODBURY
Universe Staff Writer

BYU opera lovers should not miss the music theater performance of Regina. Though the singing frequently falls short of professional standards, the production as a whole is interesting and enjoyable. Blending speech and song spiced with jazz and Negro spirituals, Regina is a modern American opera with a message more relevant today than when it premiered in 1949.

Based on Lillian Hellman's play The Little Foxes, Regina is about a Southern woman whose ruthless grasping at wealth leads to the death of her husband and the alienation of her daughter. The opera is not structured as well as the play — the second act is broken into two scenes and tends to drag — but Marc Blitzstein's libretto gives a more humanistic characterization of the heroine than does the original script.

THEATER REVIEW

Regina's materialistic values are evident in Act I when she tells her daughter Alexandra that to want and to get are the best things of all. But her aggressiveness is accompanied by warmth and charm, and in Act II she shows some tenderness when she tells her husband, Horace, "For two old drybones, I think we'll do." Unfortunately, she and her conniving brothers, Ben and Oscar, are dominated by greed. Regina tells a former beau, "I'm in love with things; you've a thousand rivals."

The message of the play is expressed clearly in Act III. In a rare moment of calm, Horace sings: "Consider the rain,/The falling of friendly rain;/It serves the earth/And then moves on again./ Some people eat all the earth/And some stand around and watch them eat it./ Consider the rain." Horace is joined by Alexandra, her aunt, Birdie, and the housekeeper, Addie, in a quartet that makes "Consider the rain" the loveliest song in the production, and the audience's favorite.

The singing opening night was generally weak and the audience was unusually unresponsive during the first two acts. Laura H. Beecroft (Regina) has a strong soprano voice and projected well, but at times she overplayed the part. Elisa Annamaria Dragotto (Alexandra) did not project her voice enough, and it was sometimes hard to understand her words. Eugene Kovalenko brought a fine bass voice and quiet dignity to the part of Horace; M. Stoddard Woodbury gave a believable portrayal of the sour, selfish Oscar; and Nolan Goodwin provided many humorous moments as Oscar's vain, scatter-brained son, Leo. However, with the exception of Kovalenko, the men in the cast did not have operatic voices and failed to do justice to the music. The male chorus members were especially weak.

The best performance opening night was given by Laura May Wilkinson as Birdie, the sensitive, talented woman whose spirit has been crushed by her marriage to Oscar. The role of Birdie requires the demonstration of sophisticated vocal techniques, and Miss Wilkinson sang the scales and trills with professional ease.

In the opera's second cast, which performed Saturday night, Lorraine D. Low gave a well-rounded portrayal of Regina, depicting her charm as well as her greed. Rebecca Rogers conveyed intense emotions as Birdie, and Barry Bounous gave a good characterization of the dapper, smooth-talking Ben.

The limited facilities of the Nelke Theater created a few minor problems, but they also allowed for a unique arrangement that made the production more interesting. The musicians were placed behind the set in the Margetts Arena Theater, which was opened up to add depth to the stage. The space between stage and orchestra was covered with a rich red carpet, and in the party scene it was used as a ballroom where the dancers and musicians became part of the drama.

The main stage, with the glow of red plush and the gleam of silver, has been transformed into a Southern parlor by scenic designer Bruce Duerden. With turn-of-the-century costumes by Kevin Crouch, the production is visually if not vocally impressive.

Regina is being performed today through Friday, with the first cast tonight and Thursday and the second cast Wednesday and Friday.

The Daily Universe

It's worth looking into, BYU—daily

The Daily Universe is not just an exercise for a few ambitious students. Nor is it a futile attempt to plagiarize the New York Times.

Let's look deeper: The Daily Universe is a very successful publication, rated as the fifth largest campus daily in the U.S. It is directed towards a large audience—you, the BYU students. You are a unique and distinctive group of people, comprised of individuals with different interests and abilities, yet bonded together with common ideals.

The Daily Universe recognizes your individuality and designs its format towards you, not after some hometown local or metropolitan daily.

You may be interested in news and current affairs. You may enjoy cultural events or seeing a good movie. Sports and competitive games may be your real love. Whatever your tastes, the Daily Universe is there to serve you.

Still, not everyone enjoys the same things in a newspaper. That's why the Universe tries to balance its content.

When you look in the Universe you'll find: News, Sports, Entertainment, Editorial Pages (Wed. and Fri.), Photo Pages, "On The Tube", Editorial cartoons, "Peanuts", and lots more.

Remember the Daily Universe is your paper, so look into it closely—and see what it offers you.
